

XM Satellite Radio offers us a level of service not to be found anywhere else with other radio and television providers. It does not seem logical that XM should be denied the opportunity to compete in the market place. It makes even less sense that consumers should be denied the full benefit of their product. If XM is a threat to other station owners, it would seem obvious that they are not delivering the same quality. Should consumers have to settle for less in order to protect those who are not forward-thinking? We pay for our XM service and are entitled to the best they have to offer.
